PANEL 1: Cyber Security and Online Radicalization – New Virtual Battlefield

The panel will discuss necessity and possibility to step up coherent regional efforts in order to prevent online radicalization that could lead to terrorist actions that is misusing borderless and virtual character of the cyber space. The cyber security would benefit from a more joined-up and forward thinking regional approach, which would build on the work and structures of existing regional institutions. Is this something that goes beyond definition of critical infrastructure and requires better legislative context (hate speech, fake news, dark web...)?

Moderator: Amer Kapetanovic, Head of the Political Department (RCC)

13:45 – 15:15 PANEL 2: Regional Coherence in P/CVE in SEE – Lessons we can learn from each other

This panel will discuss a way ahead towards more regional coherence in P/CVE approaches - effective prevention and countering of radicalization that may lead to violent extremism or terrorism through a whole society approach. This includes challenges such as effective adjustment of institutional set-up, legal alignment, implementation and enforcement capacity to the local and regional needs. As sustainable P/CVE requires well - orchestrated holistic approach of all stakeholders and parts of society, this panel will also explore best cases of the so-called whole-of-society approach – from social affairs, health, education, media and strategic communication in countering extremist narratives on the one hand, and all the way to the role of law enforcement on the other.
